Alum gets Talmudic with the Library

It’s the unmet need, the open opportunity, which inspires some Libraries supporters to take action. Such was the case with Rutgers College graduate David Salem.

David returned to the Rutgers-New Brunswick campus a few years back for a class reunion and stopped in at Alexander Library to examine the Jewish religious book collection. He noticed that the collection was missing some critical components. So he decided to help fill the gap by adding one sizeable element. In the spring 2006 semester, with the assistance of world history librarian, Jim Niessen, David donated a full 73 volume set of the Schottenstein Edition of the Babylonian Talmud, published by the Jewish book publisher ArtScroll, to the Rutgers University Libraries.

The Talmud is the cornerstone of Jewish religious Oral Law. One of the principles of Jewish tradition is that God dictated the Written Torah (the Five Books of Moses) to Moses and also

University Librarian’s Report

Budget cuts impact at the Libraries: Update

I am very happy to report that the partial restoration of funding for higher education in the state budget has meant a partial restoration of funding for the Libraries. The University established an additional reduction category of “academic support unit” that includes the Libraries and reduced our budget by 8.2% rather than 10%. As a result, we need to absorb a permanent reduction of $1,944,466 — a restoration of $426,834. In addition, we were given a one-time special allocation of $198,166 for collections.

We will still need to freeze approximately 20 positions yet we will avoid layoffs. We will be able to fill four previously frozen positions, and we will be able to fill some of the positions that become vacant during the year. Because we will be significantly reducing our operating funds, including wages of labor for hourly employees, we will not be able to do everything we want to do to provide excellent services for faculty and students.

Many operations will not cease, but will slow down. Some new activities will be curtailed and many serials and databases will be cancelled. The one-time funding for collections will be applied to the purchase of new books.

Our website will provide important information for library staff and our users about what services will be changing. Details about specific changes appear below under the appropriate categories. We appreciate your continued support and understanding at this difficult time.

Document Delivery

The Libraries’ document delivery service provided through the Ingenta database was canceled on July 1, 2006. Users may continue to order articles from Ingenta directly and charge them to a personal credit card. However, Rutgers journal holdings will not display in the Ingenta database and the Libraries’ account will not be active.

Interlibrary Loan Services is an alternative for quick delivery of articles not available at Rutgers: http://www.libraries.rutgers.edu/cgi-bin/ILL Patron.pl. Most ILL article requests are filled within 48 hours and delivered to users’ desks.

Service Changes

The Libraries will be making a number of public services changes for the upcoming academic year.

provided an oral explanation of how to interpret the Torah and observe its 613 Commandments. Without the Oral Law, the Written Torah could be misinterpreted or distorted beyond recognition.

The Oral Law explains the details of how to observe the Sabbath, Jewish holidays, kosher dietary laws; how to perform a Jewish wedding and many other areas of Jewish life. Such detail is not included in the Written Torah. The Oral Law also explains that the Biblical injunction of an “eye for an eye” (Leviticus 24:20 and Deuteronomy 19:21) should not be interpreted literally but rather to mean proportionate monetary compensation.

The Libraries are very grateful to David Salem for his generous donation. The Talmud set will surely inspire generations of students and faculty to consider, discuss, and debate the many questions and answers that helped establish the rites, rules, and practices of the Jewish faith.

Libraries add three new, high quality databases: Cost = $0

Despite the severe constraints of an adverse budget, the Libraries seek to add to our collection of research resources wherever the cost is feasible and the quality of the resource is top-notch. Working within those parameters, the Libraries recently added three promising new databases, at no cost.

Child Abuse, Child Welfare & Adoption Database presents information about the well being of children. Some subject areas covered include: child maltreatment, out-of-home placement and adoption. Information on service programs, prevention programs, federally funded research, training programs, and ethnicity and cultural competency is also available. The materials include books, journal articles, conference papers, unpublished documents, reports, treatment strategies and final grant reports. The database is produced and provided for free by the federal government.

VioLit, as the abbreviated title indicates, is a bibliographic database about violence literature. The database is published and distributed for free by the Center for the Study and Prevention of Violence (CSPV), a research program of the Institute of Behavioral Science (IBS) at the University of Colorado at Boulder. This database covers information about violence from books, literature reviews, journal articles and reports.

The Homeland Security Digital Library (HSDL) is a compendium of materials available for scholarly research in the area of Homeland Security. The digital library collection is focused on strategy and policy in the various subject areas of homeland security research and supports the curriculum of the Center for Homeland Defense and Security (CHDS). Materials selected for inclusion in the HSDL come from: governmental departments and agencies, academic institutions, think tanks, conference sites, non-governmental organizations, and other entities. The database is produced and provided for free by the federal government.

Users can access each of these three databases from the front page of the Libraries website, from IRLS or by following the path: Research Resources > Indexes and Databases > Social Sciences and Law > (name of database).
